The 27th Yamagata Banto Prize

(Osaka's International Cultural Award)

● Yamagata Banto (1748-1821) ●

Yamagata Banto was born in Kazume Village of Inami-gun, Harima (presently known as Takasago City in Hyogo Prefecture) in 1748.

As chief clerk of Masuya, one of the largest Osaka merchants engaged in the money exchange business, Banto restored the company to greatness after its business had been dwindling. He was also noted for the extraordinary talent he displayed when saving the Sendai feudal domain from financial difficulties.

He loved learning by nature. Banto was respected as a genius at Kaitokudo-a private school which offered education of the highest level at that time.

His lifework, Yume-no-Shiro (which comes in 12 volumes), contains outstanding economic theory, atheistic theory which denies mysticism, and even a daring cosmic theory contending the existence of innumerable solar systems similar to our own. The work has an overtone of rationalism and realism.

- 1 Criteria ————— The Osaka Prefectural Government invites nominations of appropriate authors and works published outside of Japan that have increased international understanding of Japanese culture. Nominations should be made in accordance with the following criteria.
