I have three steps for language activities to improve students' spoken interaction skills in my lesson.

First, I will show students a model conversation in order to show them a learning goal.

Second, I will ask them to say words related to the topic as a form of brainstorming. Then I will have them write simple notes in order to arrange the contents of what they want to say.

Finally, I will have them talk in pairs and ask questions to each other, giving them some support or guidance as needed.

By repeating this practice, students' spoken interaction skills will improve.
