The most important thing in making goals and plans is to share these achievement goals, instruction plans, and evaluation plans with students. No matter how hard teachers work to set these goals and plans, if teachers don't share them with students, that leads to a situation where students have to study every day without understanding the learning route.

I believe that it's essential to balance digital and real-life activities for effective individualized learning in lessons. I plan to use critical thinking skills to have a parliamentary debate themed "E-books vs. Paper Books." First, I will have students research the debate topic using ICT. Then I'll build their confidence through practice with AI tools. Next, students will practice with each other, exchanging feedback. I will encourage them to converse with awareness and make adjustments to their speaking speed. Finally, as a performance test, students will give an English presentation to their classmates and receive advice from a native speaker. (100 words)
